■ Kasuga Taisha Shrine

Ancient myths tell us that about 1300 years ago when the national capital was built in Nara, Takemikazuchi-no-mikoto came all the way from Kashima Shrine (Ibaraki Prefecture) to Mt. Mikasa, which is considered a holy mountain, to dwell on its summit "Ukigumo-no-mine" for the prosperity of the nation and happiness of the people. Later on, when Tempyo Culture flourished, the political leader Fujiwara-no-Nagate built magnificent buildings on the present site of the shrine as ordained by Empress Shotoku. On November 9, 768, he enshrined several gods here, namely Futsunushi-no-mikoto from Katori Shrine (Chiba Prefecture), and Amenokoyane-no-mikoto and Himegami from Hiraoka Shrine (Osaka Prefecture). This is how Kasuga Taisha began.

Japanese Kimono Experience

One of the first things people think of when thinking about Japan is a Kimono.

Experience the wearing of a traditional Japanese Kimono, dressed by a professional in the art of Kimono wearing.

What Kind Of Fabrics Are Used?

Traditionally, Kimonos are sewn by hand. The Kimono and Obi are traditionally made of silk, silk brocade, silk crepes and satin weaves. Modern Kimonos are widely available in less expensive easy-care fabrics such as rayon, cotton sateen, cotton, polyester and other synthetic fibers. Silk is still considered the ideal fabric.

Imaicho

Going to Imaicho is like taking a time machine back to the Edo-Period. Imaicho is a unusually large preserved historic district where traditional old-style Japanese houses from the Edo Period still stand. Not only can you walk around the neighborhood but you can actually step inside some of the houses which are more than 350 years old. Being in Imaicho makes you feel like you traveled back to the time where Samurai's and Ninja's roamed the streets.
